COLORADO SYMPHONY ANNOUNCES COVID-19 POLICY CHANGES

Beginning March 14, proof of vaccination will no longer be required to attend indoor Colorado Symphony performances and mask wearing will be optional for patrons

Mar. 14, 2022 – Denver, CO – The Colorado Symphony has announced a change to their COVID-19 policy. Effective immediately, patrons will no longer be required to show proof of vaccination or a negative COVID-19 test to attend Colorado Symphony performances, and the wearing of masks in Boettcher Concert Hall will be optional.

Last fall, the four resident companies that perform in downtown’s Arts Complex — Colorado Ballet, Colorado Symphony, Denver Center for the Performing Arts and Opera Colorado — issued a joint COVID-19 policy requiring vaccinations and masks at all indoor ticketed events. Beginning now and throughout the spring, each resident company of downtown’s Arts Complex will relax the COVID vaccination policy at a time that aligns with their patron, programming, and contractual needs.

Colorado Symphony statement:

Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, we have monitored regional Covid-19 data and followed the guidance of the CDC and our partners at UCHHealth, as well as public health and government officials, to implement mitigation protocols that provide a safe and comfortable environment for the enjoyment of live, symphonic music.

As the number of Covid-19 cases continues to decline in the region, we have adjusted our protocols accordingly. Beginning today, patrons will no longer be required to show proof of vaccination or a negative Covid-19 test to attend our performances, and the wearing of masks in Boettcher Concert Hall will be optional.

Please watch for additional announcements from our partners at the Colorado Ballet, Denver Center for the Performing Arts and Opera Colorado.
