ABOUT GREGORY ALAN ISAKOV:

Born in Johannesburg, South Africa, and now calling Colorado home, horticulturist/musician Gregory Alan Isakov has cast an impressive presence on the indie-rock and folk worlds with his six full-length studio albums: That Sea, The Gambler; This Empty Northern Hemisphere; The Weatherman; Gregory Alan Isakov with the Colorado Symphony; Evening Machines (nominated for a Grammy award for Best Folk Album), and Appaloosa Bones. Isakov tours internationally with his band, and has performed with national symphony orchestras across the United States.

Isakov's new record, Appaloosa Bones, was released via Dualtone/Suitcase Town Music. Of the album, MOJO states, "Prime Isakov: his velvet baritone glides over elegant and shimmering Wild West mirages."

The Associated Press proclaims, “He has that magical ability to convey both urgency and grandeur at the same time...Simple. Straightforward. Utterly evocative.” And No Depression declares, “this is Isakov’s genius. He turns a short poem into a magnificent piece of music that can captivate for hours.”

When he is not on the road, he runs Starling Farm (a small farm in Boulder County), which provides produce to CSA members, restaurants, and Community Food Share (a local food bank).
